Lehigh University's Department of Management seeks to fill a full-time professor of practice position in supply chain management beginning January 2018. This is a non-tenure track, full time, fixed term, renewable position. Candidates must be able to teach supply-chain and operations management related courses, at the undergraduate and graduate level. The selected candidate is expected to be highly engaged and committed member of the Department and will be involved in undergraduate and graduate teaching, curriculum development, student mentoring and department service assigned by the department chair. The standard teaching schedule is 4 courses per academic semester (Fall and Spring). The candidate is also expected to actively participate in Lehigh University’s Center for Supply Chain Research, which fosters industry support and research on supply chain management. Interested candidates must possess at least a completed Master’s degree and extensive supply chain and operations management industry experience. Teaching experience at the collegiate level is preferred. Lehigh University is focused on providing excellence in undergraduate and graduate education.

The undergraduate business program was ranked 24th in the nation in 2016 and noted as a “top 10 school to watch in 2017” by Poets & Quants.
