Dr. David Zhang is an Assistant Professor of Management in the College of Business and Economics, Lehigh University where he teaches Graduate and Undergraduate courses in Business Information Systems and Business Analytics.

Dr. Zhang received his Ph.D. in Management Information Systems from The University of Calgary, Canada, his master’s degree in Economics from HKUST, Hong Kong, and his bachelor’s degree in Computer Science from Sun Yat-sen University, China. He joined the Department of Management at Lehigh University in Fall 2015. Before joining Lehigh’s faculty, he served as an assistant professor at the Kania School of Management, University of Scranton.

Dr. Zhang’s current research interests include business value of IT, IT substitutability, and healthcare informatics. He has published in top business journals such as the Information Systems Research, and has presented his work at numerous venues in the United States, Canada and China.